of HBAI. The GOP had less than 5% of the vote in the 2002 election and just 2% in 2006. The HBAI party that Mr. Janook has warned about has been around for more than 100 years, as have all ethnic nationalist parties in Israel. Why does Mr. Janook hate Israel's non-governmental organizations with such passion? It is reasonable for the Israeli government to believe that organizations like HBAI are supported by a foreign state (Iran) or violent terrorist groups. In any case, the Supreme Court has decided to uphold the government's position that the legislation is constitutional. The Human Rights organization Adalah has filed an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief in support of HBAI. Adalah argues that the bill will result in Israel's "de-democratization," as the integrity of the political party system will be undermined. Adalah further argues that the legislation infringes on the constitutional and legal rights of citizens, such as the right to freedom of expression. Adalah further notes that the legislation conflicts with international law. The brief was filed to the Supreme Court before the end of June. The State of Israel has agreed to amend the “Association Law” to exempt the Knesset.

Presumably, the general public will be allowed to join political parties. This is a “compromise” between the interest of the governmental and the non-governmental sectors of Israeli society. It also suggests that the Knesset is willing to take on a task that is the responsibility of the Prime Minister and other government ministers. The Supreme Court decision will also have an immediate impact on the composition of the Knesset as the coalition Likud-Beytenu is expected to suffer a big blow as the ruling party will no longer have a monopoly on the Knesset floor. This is because party affiliation is not legally binding. The political party system in Israel is currently under attack by several organizations who claim that it is undemocratic. They also claim that the Knesset is the “only voice” of the people and that the judiciary system is overly biased against them. They argue that the balance of power should be altered, pointing to Israel’s precarious relationship with many Arab states. The government could also be destabilized by the possible loss of the pro-government Zionist parties, as would be the case if the

Q: Combining two columns of an Array in Oracle I have an existing application that stores data in an array. The structure of this data looks like the following declare myType my_array[1] := 'some_value'; end; The data stored in the array is complex, and it is not possible to easily change the internal structure. The only way i know of approaching this problem is to loop through the array and cut the second element of my_array[1] into my_array[2]. This can be easily done with the following code: declare myType my_array[1] := 'some_value'; type tempType is table of my_type; temp1 tempType := my_array[2]; begin for i in 1..temp1.count loop temp1(i) := temp1(i+1); end loop; end; Is it possible to do the same thing with two columns as follows: declare myType my_array[1]

:= 'some_value'; myType

my_array[2] := 'some_value'; end;

This is not possible because the myType type is defined in the same order as the array elements. Any ideas? I don't mind altering the existing application if i must.

Thanks! A: I figured it out. The trick is to use pseudo-type. declare type myType is table of myType; myType my_array[1] := 'some_value';

myType my_array[2]

```
:= 'some_value'; begin for i in

1..my_array.count loop my_array(i)

:= my_array(i+1); end loop; end; Q:

Rails 3 migrations with RSpec Rails
