I am developing in JavaScript and I would like to know how to link two modules that are situated on the same node. I know that I can go to another node (in relation to the server) and link two modules for the first time like this: I3.join('other-module.js', function() { setTimeout(function() { for(var key in this) { console.log(this[key]); } }, 1000); }); But how do I link two modules that are situated on the same node for the first time? A: You need to execute all the modules before calling them: var modules = []; modules.push(module1, module2, module3); // an array of modules Then, call all the modules in sequence: modules.forEach(function(module, index, array) { module.call(); // call module }) If you want to wait for all the modules to complete before continuing with the next operation, then use callbacks: var modules = []; modules.push(module1, module2, module3); // an array of modules modules.forEach(function(module, index, array) { module.call(function(done) { d0c515b9f4
