Tip Adobe offers several tutorials that show you how to utilize the various features of Photoshop. For example, Adobe's site has free or low-cost tutorials for designing, creating, and editing logos, for making changes to a picture, and for using various tools and techniques to improve a photograph. All those tutorials are quite useful for those of you who have already gotten to know the program and are working in it on a regular basis. If you need a crash course in using Photoshop, check out the _Photoshop CS6 All-In-One For Dummies_ by Jenny Rade Fisk (Wiley). However, if you're fairly new to the program, you may find it a little intimidating at first. What to do? Start with some of the Photoshop tutorials that you can find on the Internet. If you need more help getting started with the program, download one of the all-in-one tutorials that you find at the end of the chapter. # One-Step Actions Photoshop has two action modes: It can either store your settings as a single action, which can be re-used for various images, or it can save several actions, each with a specific function. Because it enables you to save the settings for that action as a single piece of information, which you can then apply to different images with just a few clicks. If you have a particular look in mind, you can then save that look as an action so that you can reuse it with all the images you work on. To store an action, make sure that the layer you're working on is empty and then follow these steps: 1. Choose

Q: javascript variable set with php code I'm making a JavaScript function that for "username" and "password" I get from PHP with $_POST["username"] and $_POST["password"] The code is something like this: function form_validation() { var username = ; var password = ; } The problem is that when I try to use variable it returns "SyntaxError: unterminated string literal". Is there any other way to pass the php code into javascript? A: No. JavaScript code is not interpreted by the PHP. They are two separate entities. What you can do is put together all of those PHP variables into a single string: function form_validation() { var username = ""; var password = ; } See this question for more information on using the php variables in javascript. 2017年9月11 100 1
