The good news is that you don't need to be a professional to use Photoshop, and if you have a good eye for design, you can still turn out some impressive pieces of work in this powerful image editor. Here is how you can make your image appear more professional and affect the layout and appearance of your work. Automatic Image

Enhancers Add Fade and Dodge effects There are many features in Photoshop that enable you to bring an image to life, but two of the most popular and widely used tools are Dodge and Fade. Dodge is a lightening technique that removes bright, redundant areas of an image, essentially leaving the darker parts unaffected. Fade is the reverse, taking lightened areas and making them darker, reducing the overall lightness of the image. Dodge and Fade are very important for making your images look more professional. You can find all sorts of tutorials explaining how to use them, but here is a simple tutorial: Create a New Image Create a New Layer Using a Variable Brush Create a new layer, and add a brush with a relatively small size. Try to use either the Halo Brush

(the star icon at the top of the Brush Picker) or the Linear Gradient Brush (the triangle icon) for this project. Draw a thin stroke along the edges of your image, adjusting the size of the brush as you draw. While the size of the brush is still large, reduce the size to about 15 percent. You should see your image begin to darken from top to bottom with this setting. The next step is to add a narrow, gradual fade around the edges of your image with the Dodge and Fade tools. To add a fade, select the Dodge and Fade button in the bottom-left corner of the Layers panel. In the Dodge and Fade window, use the Gradient tool (the line icon) to draw a gradient that overlays your image, starting dark and finishing with a light color. Adjust the gradient's height, leaving a slight border around the edges of the image. Save the document. Add a New Layer, and Fill it With Black Add a new layer, and fill it with black. Use the Eraser tool to remove the image in the original layer, and begin to erase around the edges of the image, starting with the top edge. You should see the edges of the image

Republicans' Pennsylvania victory with Romney Published 5:30 am, Saturday, November 11, 2012 PHILADELPHIA — Mitt Romney has been the top choice of Republican primary voters in Pennsylvania for months, but the general election was far from a sure thing going into the election Tuesday. "Pennsylvania went for the outsider," Chris Christie said after emerging from his defeat to Rick Santorum on Tuesday. "Pennsylvania went for somebody who wasn't seeking your approval. They wanted somebody who had given them a good education at Penn State and who could bring about change in Washington." Many elected Republicans said the same thing, including John McCain, who has devoted this year's general election to a hardy line of attack: "Obama is the most liberal Republican president since Herbert Hoover." In Pennsylvania's primary, Romney won 60 percent to Santorum's 19 percent, according to Politico, which called the state for Romney. Santorum was the only Republican to exceed the 20 percent threshold to win delegates. "It's about to be a long, hard winter for Mitt Romney," David Cornwell, the Democratic mayor of Harrisburg, said of the Romney-Santorum showdown. In the primary, Santorum, who said he hoped to bring about change in Washington, stressed his family life. Some said Santorum's cool-headed performance with voters across Pennsylvania — including his father's work in welfare reform and his mother's attendance at church — improved his general election prospects. The Republican race, not including Gary Johnson and other third-party candidates, was the most expensive in the history of U.S. presidential elections, putting the $2.8 billion spent on it on par with the $3.5 billion spent on the 2008 race between Obama and Sen. John McCain. Because of how the primary works — voters can support only one candidate from each of the two major parties — Santorum has the chance to win the most delegates to the Republican National Convention if he wins the GOP nomination. Santorum, who came in third in the primary, is going to the convention as the front-runner and his delegates are likely to be at the forefront in endorsing the nominee. RELATED: Polls show Santorum surging as he closes in on Romney In a blow for Romney, former House speaker Newt Gingrich didn't win a single Pennsylvania delegate, according to the Associated Press. Gingrich, who came in second in the primary, got off to a great
