I want to have some method, like this: class A(object): def my_method(self, x: int, y: string, z: float): pass then i will do this: a = A() a.my_method(10, 'abc', 2.0) And python3 will resolve this automatically to something like that: a.my_method(10, str('abc'), 2.0) Do i really need to define class A with special constructors? Is it possible to somehow define a class in a parameter list? My main goal is to be able to build classes with function in parameter list. A: Python doesn't have this kind of assignment for function parameters Instead you can use the descriptor protocol def my_method(self, x: int, y: str, z: float): pass class A: @classmethod def my_method(cls, x, y, z): pass Modes of vascular proliferation in human subretinal neovascularization.
