Since the accident, there is a lack of humanity, joy and warmth on the show. So with the damage done, both out of the studio, producers Christopher Austen and Ian Brennan have made a decision to change the writing team. The producers have hired another writer, who has been helping to write scripts for the show since it aired, to take over. "He's been helping for the last seven months," Murphy revealed to EW. "He's been writing for Glee and breaking into the scripting process, and then finding his place, and watching and learning." And, Austen and Brennan hope that the new addition will bring a lighter, more human touch to the show. "We want to make sure that there's a lot of the things that made Glee great, the humanizing of the stories, the characters...it's not a change so much as a thematic shift," Austen said. "These characters have all suffered so much at the hands of fate. They are just characters in a show about talent. They're doing what they're doing because they love to do it, they're not just jumping through hoops. It's a giant yearning in all the characters now, even if they're left wounded and they are in pain."Coping with admission to pediatric intensive care unit: parental perception and coping styles in parents and children.
