on, but I think they're being more deliberate about it, and it's good they're being more intentional. And he's the first guy to say, "Look, we have to invest in ourselves and we have to invest in our growth." Are you able to learn more about the state of the business side of things? To be honest, we're not [much]. What we've been looking at is basically, like, "Did [Alex's] voice make a difference in our bottom line?" Because it's hard to quantify, but it's clearly on the radar. The whole company is really embracing, like, "What can we do to grow?" And that comes from a guy who's known for his tough-love approach. I think he feels like people are coming in and disrupting and it's going to continue and his role is to be the mediator, just a little bit of that tough love. That's his MO. What do you think of what you see is the state of sports? I think the business is changing. I think the business is changing in a positive way. I don't think it's going to die — I think the fans are going to outlive it — but I think there's a great opportunity for companies like ours to take a run at it, and I think we are. You look at the most successful teams in the NFL and MLS — not just the league itself, but the teams — that's how they're doing it. And it's not just about the sports themselves; it's about the fan experience. As the NFL looks ahead to the new season, here are some key stories you might want to watch closely: Previewing the Chiefs' season The NFL season kicks off Thursday night, but it's still too early to call the winners and losers for the 2019 season. So what should we watch closely as we head into training camp, preseason games and the regular season? Here are some thoughts on where the league could be headed as the season approaches, and here are some top storylines to watch, from big wide-open playoff races to improving New England teams and more. Are you in one of those movies where you find out at the end of the movie it was all
