Lithium as a new depolarizing agent in molluscan preparations. I. Extracellular recordings of the molluscan giant axon. Effects of lithium and ouabain on the properties of the molluscan giant axon have been investigated. The results show that the addition of lithium to the bathing medium in doses up to 10mM induces the appearance of a slowly conducting process that completely depolarizes the axon membrane and opens mechanically sensitive channels that are probably those of K(+). The distribution of the differently conducting lithium currents in the axon suggests that the lithium current may originate from distal portions of the axon and that this compound could be a useful tool in the investigation of ion fluxes in axons.
