In this study, microencapsulation of lipophilic drugs was performed by interfacial polymerization technique. To achieve this aim, two series of poly(methyl methacrylate) (PMMA) in water mixtures were prepared. In the first series, poly(ethylene glycol) (PEG) was copolymerized with MMA at the organic phase and in the second series, the MMA monomer was polymerized at the water phase. The effect of the ratio of water/organic solvent on the encapsulation efficiency of lipophilic drugs was studied. The results showed that the encapsulation efficiency of drugs was increased by decreasing the volume of organic solvent in the water phase. This was due to the emulsification effect of the PEG-copolymerized water in the organic phase. The efficiency of this method for the microencapsulation of hydrophilic and lipophilic drugs was further investigated. Water, caffeine, lidocaine and metoprolol were successfully microencapsulated using this new method. The effect of microencapsulation process on the stability and drug release of caffeine was also investigated. In conclusion, the microencapsulation of lipophilic drugs by this novel method could be applied to the incorporation of these drugs into pharmaceutical formulations such as aqueous gels and ointments.That's why you want me to hold one side down to get a better view of the other one.
