[Effect of 30 d treatment of a mixture of fatty acids on alpha-esterase activity in the rat small intestine]. The influence of the oral administration of fatty acid mixture on the alpha-esterase activity was studied on small intestine of rats. A 10-fold decrease of the alpha-esterase activity was observed at the first day of the experiment, and the difference in the activity was still observed at the day 30 (p Q: Where should I draw the line when it comes to editors and reputation? I know some of you won't like that I'm asking this, but hear me out... I contribute by editing answers and questions on Stack Overflow and occasionally vote to close. Now I noticed that one user (and I don't know who he is, so I don't know whether to complain or not) has a very high reputation, but has about the same number of edits as I have. It is very suspicious as to how that user has gotten so much reputation with such few edits. Obviously, there is no way I could manage to get that much reputation in a few months, even if I "liked" everything. Either this guy is a hacker or... what do you think? I know that if I share my suspicion I will be accused of "hatred", which I'm not. I know I can't prove it, so that's why I'm asking here. A: Obviously, there is no way I could manage to get that much reputation in a few months, even if I "liked" everything. You are in luck: for good behavior at some point the system may elevate you to moderator. Moderators are trusted and yet still cannot exceed reputation 300. But you can always stop future reputation growth by rejecting edits that aren't improvements. If you happen to find that your own edits help keep the site clean, that's a plus. A: This is almost certainly some form of automatic spamming. In that scenario, you have two choices. You can either flag it as spam, which is going to earn you your own reputation back, or you can close the question as off-topic, which is going to earn you close votes in a predictable pattern.

What's New In?

Q: "And" versus "But" First of all, I'm sorry for asking this. I don't really think it's a homework question but I'll ask for any other help too. Which is better, "And" or "But"? 1) I don't want to use 'And' in the title because it lacks a sound effect because it is said as just 'and' 2) I want to use 'But' in the title because it focuses on the sound effect, but I'm not sure if the title should be 'But I don't want to use 'And' in the title', can anybody please help me choose the proper title for it? A: "But" suggests comparison. "And" suggests a next step. You can see this in a brief examination of the sentences: "And" is a step on from "I do not want to use 'And'" with a shift in emphasis. "But" implies a return to the previous point. In the title it seems like you want to emphasise that you don't want to use "And" or the other. In this case, you would use "But". "But I don't want to use 'And'", this is redundant. It seems as if you want to emphasise the "But" in the sentence. You can solve this by not emphasising the "But" or "But I don't want to use", you could solve this by rewording the sentence to "I don't want to use but I don't want to use 'And'" So "But I don't want to use 'And'" is the most succinctly, and clearly, expressing your thoughts. A special Sunday show for all-new episodes of So You Think You Can Dance will be a part of the 2014 AT&T American Music Awards broadcast. The two-hour special will be available on the all-new ABC digital channel "Dancing with the Stars," giving more people the opportunity to watch the show, says the network. "As the dance competition genre's only television home, 'Dancing with the Stars' is considered by many to be the epitome of American entertainment," said Paul Telegdy, president of alternative and late night programming for ABC Entertainment. "AT&T's exclusive on-air broadcast of
