There he reported catching a substantial number of large catfish of about twelve inches long. Since this first reporting of a monster catfish, dozens of records of exceptional catfish fishing have been made. In 1859 Charles Darwin made the first recorded account of an angling trip to the river Severn in Gloucestershire, UK. There he reported catching a substantial number of large catfish of about twelve inches long. Since this first reporting of a monster catfish, dozens of records of exceptional catfish fishing have been made. While it is not known when the giant fish first appears on the scene, it clearly was big when records were kept. The first reported record was made in 1921, when the catch weighed 2,066 pounds! A truly giant fish was caught in 1891, weighed over six feet, and must have been quite a fish to look at. The largest recorded fish was weighed at 1,970 pounds, caught in England in 1936. Later in the 1940s the Japanese caught a fish that weighed 1,300 pounds. One fisherman caught a giant catfish with a streamer pole that he later reported weighed 1,635 pounds! This fish must have been a monster to see. How They are Caught Catfish are occasionally caught by anglers using baited drift-fishing. They are more frequently caught by casting spoons, and trolling for catfish with bait. Catfish are also taken by anglers using live baits d0c515b9f4
