The interrelationships between psychological and bodily factors that contribute to the experience of anxiety are investigated. In a naturalistic study, patients with panic attacks (N = 50) were administered the Anxiety Disorders Interview Schedule-Revised and the Multidimensional Anxiety and Depression Scale. Body map ratings of 8 anxiety-related symptoms and 9 bodily images were obtained. A factor analysis supported the existence of a negative emotional domain and a somatic somatization factor. The somatic somatization factor was strongly related to self-report measures of anxiety and depression. In a second study of patients with a primary anxiety disorder (N = 50), therapist ratings of relationship symptoms and somatic complaints and laboratory autonomic recordings were measured at intake and 6 weeks later. Relapse at 6 weeks was related to greater bodily images (somatic complaints and pain) and less effective dissociation (anxiety). The results support the notion of somatic and negative emotional dimensions of anxious arousal and the importance of cognitive factors in the maintenance of anxiety.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a surface treatment method, a method of manufacturing an FPD (Flat Panel Display), and an FPD manufacturing apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art An electrophoretic method is widely employed for manufacturing a color filter for an electrophoretic display. A color filter obtained by the electrophoretic method is generally formed by coating a color resist (resist in general) containing pigments on a substrate, for example, a glass substrate. The color filter is formed by a coating process and a patterning process that overlap each other. It is possible to obtain a high-density color filter by shortening the coating process and shortening the formation time in the patterning process. Accordingly, a coating apparatus that can cope with both of high-speed formation and formation at a high density is desired. However, the pigment contained in the color resist is difficult to uniformly disperse in an organic solvent. Thus, the pigment is difficult to adhere onto the color resist uniformly. As a result, a nonuniform layer is formed on a substrate at a coating process. Additionally, the pigment is difficult to b7e8fdf5c8
