To get started in Photoshop, select File>Open and navigate to your Photoshop files and choose the photo you would like to open. Photoshop will open the new image in the image display window. On the main menu bar, click the Window icon and then click the Open/Save icon to bring up Photoshop's Open dialog box. On the left side of the dialog box, click the drive where you want to save the file to. Photoshop makes a backup copy of your file in a folder named "Photoshop Backups". If you save the file to the same drive as where you saved your original image, Photoshop will overwrite the original file. On the right side of the dialog box, you see the Save As dialog box. This is your screen to name your file and save it to the drive of your choice. It does not make the file Photoshop Save As dialog box, but it's just another window for you to save a file. To save the file, click the Save icon. Figure 3: Clicking on the File menu and choosing Save opens the Save As dialog box and gives you the option to Save the file to your hard drive. Photoshop uses layers, which are made up of image areas that are made opaque, transparent, or gradient. This section will give you a general description of Photoshop's Photoshop image editing tool. It helps you understand the basic elements of an image as well as the basics of the image editing and retouching process. These layers enable you to easily edit and re-edit the image. You can also add layers that enable you to quickly add another layer. The Photoshop editing tool can be used by the entire Photoshop application. It is only when you open your files that it becomes a layer-based editing tool. You can move and delete multiple layers with a move or delete tool. It is possible to use the entire program's library of tools to edit an image. However, you also have the ability to make edits with only Photoshop's own tools. Figure 4: Selecting Edit>Layers gives you access to layers, which enable you to make changes to layers individually or all together. Once you have opened an image, it is time to understand the layers and their properties. Layers contain any number of "components," such as color, type, or texture. For example, the image may have a background layer, color layers, and text layers. Some layers may contain only an image area. You can add new

Smart Blur This filter is to blur a photo around your selected area. It works in the same way as the original Photoshop Blur or Gaussian Blur filter. However, it can be used to apply a different blur filter as well. For example, you can apply a Lens Blur filter or a Motion Blur filter. In addition, Smart Blur is now included in the Filter Gallery, so you can find Smart Blur filter in the new Filter Browser. Note: Blur filters are now available in the Filter Gallery. Press the Filter button in the top of the image preview. Select [Filter] then drag any of the listed blur filters into the Filter Gallery window. In the Filter Gallery you will see Smart Blur filter. Filters from the Filter Gallery are available in addition to the Lens Blur, Motion Blur, etc. filters. You can apply many blur filters in the same photo with Smart Blur filter. The filters are applied in the order you selected them. Smart Blur also includes the Adjustment Layer Blur filter. This filter can be applied to any adjustments in Adjustments Layers. Adjustments Layers Adjustments Layers are a feature introduced with Photoshop CS6. Adjustments Layers are used to apply several settings and layers of adjustments to an image at once. Adjustments Layers are arranged in a multi-layer panel on the Layers panel. You can apply any of the settings to any of the Adjustments Layers. You can use any of the settings of an Adjustment Layer without any of the other Adjustment Layer settings. This makes it possible to edit the same image with different sets of settings, each time with a different look. How to use Adjustments Layers in Photoshop? Select the Adjustments Layers panel on the Layers panel. Select the tick icons of any Adjustment Layers. The Adjustments Layers panel now opens with all of the selected Adjustment Layers. Note: You can create a number of Adjustments Layers and apply them all at once. When you apply a setting to an Adjustment Layer, all of the selected Adjustment Layers receive that setting at once. The difference is that applying a setting to an Adjustment Layer creates a Mask of all selected Adjustment Layers as a background. If 05a79cecff

Ri, Nor. 08/08/2012 - Norway now ranks second in the Global Innovation Index 2012 after Taiwan, followed by Japan, Singapore and China. According to the European Innovation Scoreboard (EIS), from EFI Group, this is a leading indicator of innovation performance. The OECD's International Innovation Survey has proven to be a valid and reliable tool for comparing innovation performance in over 100 countries for the past 15 years, and the EIS uses this tool to provide the best sources of information on innovation performance in various sectors. In the new Global Innovation Index 2012 of the EIS, Norway becomes the country most strongly associated with the term innovation. The Norwegian score is based on the number of patents granted to the different industries, the number of researchers registered with the R&D organisation, the level of R&D expenditure, the number of times the Government has been using R&D, the number of patent applications granted and the R&D institutions and universities. Norway's ranking of second place is closely associated with the fact that the country is currently experiencing a period of economic expansion. It is the highest ranked country with the fastest growing economy after Singapore, and this is how it is credited with rank number two in this latest innovation index, and with staying at this position. Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Netherlands, and New Zealand come in the positions of 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th, respectively. Finland and Denmark have not stood still during the period, but are performing at a level around the average index value of the countries in the most developed group. European countries generally are improving their positions, and this is expected, given the current performance of these countries in many areas (economy, education, health, research and development, and innovation). Ireland, Estonia and Belgium have improved their positions in the past two years, and Portugal, Finland and Sweden have moved up 10 or more places. Finland, Sweden and Norway have performed the best of all countries in the index and have made the biggest improvements of 15 places or more in the last two years. The remaining European countries (the Czech Republic, Lithuania, Hungary, Latvia, Romania and Slovakia) have held their positions for over a decade, and they have not yet been able to make significant improvements to them. In both the Europe and the world rankings, the Nordic countries and Taiwan lead the way, while countries in Asia (China, Singapore, Taiwan and Japan) round out

Effects of recombinant human alpha-1-antitrypsin infused into the pulmonary artery of dogs. To determine the effect of varying the rate of infusion of recombinant human alpha-1-antitrypsin (rHA1AT) on the degree of lung injury, we studied 10 mechanically ventilated dogs infused with rHA1AT for 5 hours via an indwelling pulmonary artery catheter. They were randomly assigned to five equal-sized groups. In groups I, II, III, and IV, a 6% (wt/vol) solution of rHA1AT was infused in normal saline at a rate of 1.5, 4.5, 9.0, or 18.0 mg/kg per hour; group V animals received an isotonic saline solution. Arterial blood gas measurements and serial hematologic, hematologic, and biochemistries were obtained at baseline, 30, 60, and 120 minutes after administration of rHA1AT, and at 120 minutes after the infusion was stopped. In all groups, blood pressure increased markedly at 30 minutes after administration of the rHA1AT (P less than.05). In group V, at 120 minutes after stopping infusion, the PaO2 was significantly (P less than.05) higher than at 120 minutes after administration of the drug. This group also had a greater incidence of adverse hemodynamic effects. In group V, an increase in systemic arterial pressure (measured with a pulmonary artery catheter) and the development of pulmonary edema occurred at 60 minutes after stopping infusion. We conclude that infusion of rHA1AT at rates between 1.5 and 18 mg/kg per hour in saline produced minimal to marked improvement of PaO2 in this model and frequently resulted in adverse hemodynamic effects.By Matt Junker, President of the U.S. Foundation for Middle East Peace During my lengthy career as a diplomat and peacemaker for the United States, I have found myself repeatedly in the difficult position of defending the United States against its own foreign policy. And that has become increasingly difficult over the past year. Critics of U.S. foreign policy insist that our president, and the United States as a whole, is pursuing a discriminatory "Israel First" foreign policy agenda, ignoring the legitimate security interests of far-less-powerful countries in the Middle East while lavishing excessive attention and resources on an ancient, bigoted, and radical country. They demand that Washington withdraw its support
