1. **In the Layers panel, click the disclosure triangle at the bottom of the panel, and then click the + New Layer button**. A new empty layer is created. You can add features to this layer, as described next. Figure 8-3. You can open up the Layers panel by clicking its disclosure triangle at the bottom. Use the + New Layer button to add a new layer. A new empty layer is created with no settings. 2. **In the Layers panel, click the New Layer button**. A new layer appears, with the name New Layer 1 (Figure 8-3, top). This new layer has no effects and is ready for your work. 3. **Choose a color for the new layer and then fill it with your favorite color**. You may not get much color when you click the color box to choose a color, but you can make the color more visible by pressing Shift or ⌘-Z to make the color transparent. 4. **To add to the new layer, click inside the layer's box. Click the New Layer button again to create a second new layer**. The New Layer 1 layer appears on top of the box. Now you can add more layers to this "layer cake." 5. **With the New Layer button, click in the box next to the New Layer 1 layer**. The box opens, revealing the New Layer button. You can add a new layer, but it's usually easier to just create a new layer by pressing Shift+⌘-N. 6. **Fill the new layer with your favorite color. Press Shift+Backspace to erase the previous layer**. You start all the layers (the new layer and the box) at zero; the previous layer doesn't affect them. Now you can fill that new layer with color and add a background to it. 7. **With the Brush tool, paint the background color on the new layer. Use a soft brush with a slight amount of opacity**. You can also paint directly on the image itself by opening the Brush Tool Options and setting an opacity setting of 50% or so. You see the Select tool on the left side of the Layers panel, which you can use to select areas of the layer for more precise painting. You can either click inside the layer's box

A Playbook for Visiting the UK: Politics, Culture & Man vs. Food? So we made it here safely to London! Despite some very unexpected elements of travel. I'll outline my experience getting from New York to London and then make some general observations on the differences between the United States and the United Kingdom. In the U.S. we have passport control. This means that every time you enter a new country, you line up and have your passport checked. If you step across the border, it's just that: a border. No checkpoint, no control and no questions. The UK doesn't have passport control. You go through customs (sometimes) but you don't have to line up. This is huge in a number of ways. First, the United States has very good passport control. My dad had no issue at all getting his passport checked when he visited my mother last month, or when my stepmom and I had our passport checked last year. Even though we only have one passport, since I'm still on my parents' insurance, I've had to have my passport checked in a number of other countries. Of course, most of those were on the way back from the US, so it wasn't a huge inconvenience. However, when I went to London a few days ago, I had to line up to get my passport checked. And we're not talking a few minutes line up. People were lining up five deep – behind someone getting a coffee, behind a family getting their passports checked, etc. It was slow going, with every policeman taking a moment to stop, glance at our passports and check. My kids and I waited in line for over half an hour. And when it was our turn we didn't even get to the front. I asked what the hold-up was and was told that it was because my husband's name was spelled differently (he's German and is Anglicized to "Husley") and that the people in the line-up couldn't find his papers. (He is an accountant who works with taxes and such and his papers are required by the UK so our American passports are just good enough that it's not a problem.) They really had no way to know, since his name is actually spelled the way it's typed and both the logo and

Artemis is off to see a shrubbery. Why? How can a shrubbery be a destination, you may ask. That is because shrubberies are for having fun! These are a recreation, self-fulfillment, or escapism for you to explore a new place with others. You can choose from one of two shrubberies in WDW. The first shrubbery is the Magic Carpet Tree of the Many Colored Rocks. The second is Akershus, Norway, which is a recreation of the Royal Castle in the film "The Lion, The Witch and The Wardrobe". You can explore, find food and drink, gather paper owls, make a wish tree and enjoy other parks recreational fun activities while your family members enjoy "Jolly old England". The Magic Carpet Tree of the Many Colored Rocks features owls, torches and milk quarts (a cottage made of milk bottles) that can be explored by families. Your family members can learn about gardens and gardening. This is a perfect destination if you are visiting during the spring and summer months. There are also leprechaun trees for you to experience the "European cliches". The pathway is also lit. Akershus features its unique walking path that has been carved into a Swiss mountain. It is viewed by many as "Disney's most gorgeous attraction". It is 3 stories tall and was featured in the "Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" movie. You can explore the architecture, hear the music, smell the natural spa water and view a tree line that reaches the sky! The scenery in Akershus includes rocks, water, pine trees, wood, gardens, mountains and many more. It is one of the few attractions in Disney World that you can walk through a woodland. There are also many reasons to visit. There is an outdoor meeting place for Animal Kingdom. Because you are in the depths of the forest, you will be able to meet and hear many different animals and many different birds that have yet to be discovered. There is a tree that has tiny chairs for children to climb, climb and enjoy the view and meet a special character. This attraction is also available for nighttime shows on select nights. There is a dancing water dragon and fire-breathing dragon. If you don't make it to the
