cause for concern? As the prevalence of resistance to antibiotics increases, there is mounting concern that the issue of antibiotic resistance might lead to a significant decline in the availability of effective antimicrobial drugs. In this article, the development of resistance and the potential effect of this phenomenon on global health care are discussed. Epidemiologic evidence for an increased resistance is presented in developing countries. Resistance to single agents and multiple drug resistance are illustrated. The

Also, if there is a way to determine from the OS and/or browser, other users on the same machine when the same user visits Trimble Terramodel 10.6.22 get a different IP address, but the same user name? I don't know much about IP addresses, but I assume they're assigned randomly - or at least by DHCP. But there's nothing I can put to the test? I know, for example, that if someone at www.kiprofl.net uploads a video file to the WordPress Video Gallery using the widgets, they end up on different IP addresses than if someone does so via the admin area, which is at kiprofl.net/wp-admin, but in the same manner. A: The easiest way is to make use of the `$_SERVER` variable. If you use your browser's developer tools to inspect the browser's request headers, it will show you what is being passed in the request. See this example, from an Apache vhost: Location:

/path/to/something/somewhere.aspx?p=foo This shows the user agent (browser) that issued the request. This is the one instance of the user agent that you need to deal with. There are no others. If the user agent provides a referrer, then you may need to deal with it, but otherwise you don't need to. You can see an example in the download link above, where the referrer provides the last IP address the user's connection came from - the IP address of the site they were on just before they clicked the download link, which lets you know who's requesting the file. This doesn't give you any more information than that, of course. If you want to see what the request header content is, so you can see the actual request that was made, you can use something like Firebug for firefox or DevTools for Chrome. A: You'll have to dig through the PHP source to find the PHP that gets called to handle the request. Get a copy of the Trimble Terramodel 10.6.22 source and search through the PHP code to find the PHP functions that are called. For example, with the default setting of the WordPress upload video widget, the user agent will look like: X-Wap-User: trimble Where trimble is the user agent from the user's browser and upload
