the new release of microsoft teams has been designed with the latest versions of devices, including windows 10, windows 10 mobile, ios, android, and other web browsers. if youre an ios user, you can download the app from the app store. the ios app is compatible with the latest ios devices. it also works on macos and ipados. microsoft teams is an open platform, available in the cloud and on-premises. microsoft teams is available on premises and in the cloud in both private and public clouds and on both windows and mac. you can also integrate microsoft teams into your on-premises environment using skype for business and office 365. first, while you can use any third-party application that has the ms teams connector and is available on the windows store, we recommend you use the free community edition of ms teams. these apps run on office 365 and provide a team-wide view of all the activity going on in your organization. the third-party apps, while they can be useful, are not included on windows and are not supported by microsoft. a few words on privacy: microsoft teams is a cloud-based service. this means that we store data in the microsoft cloud and it is accessed by the app and our servers. to protect your data, microsoft applies a number of security safeguards such as secure socket layer and other transport layer security protocols, and we take steps to safeguard your information when it is in transit. this is the first release of team on linux, so naturally, it's going to have some rough edges. at this time, we have not yet moved over all of the team apps to the linux operating system and have not yet fully debugged the way that team works on the linux operating system. if you encounter any issues, please report
